

A small lantern for changing times

DOORWAY TWO · LIVING GUIDE 02

Thriving in These Times

A calm companion for a changing world

Practical hope · nervous-system care · breath · food · water community · conscious preparedness · one living step at a time

Find the next kind, capable step.

BENJY & SOFIA · AWAKENING EDEN

You do not have to carry the whole world at once.

When the future feels uncertain, our first task is not to know everything. It is to become present enough to meet what is here.

We made this companion for the moments when the news is loud, the heart is tender and the list of what might need changing feels impossibly long. It begins close to home: one breath, one nourishing meal, one honest conversation, one useful skill, one patch of living soil.

Preparedness can be loving rather than fearful. Resilience can be soft as well as strong. Thriving does not mean never struggling; it means growing the inner and outer relationships that help us respond, recover and keep caring.

How to walk with this guide

Arrive first. Choose what is useful. Practise gently. Share the light. Read slowly, skip freely, and let one page become one living action.

Inside this living companion

01	Begin with yourself	08	Movement for aliveness
02	Regenerative interbeing	09	Nature and rest
03	Nervous-system care	10	Community is resilience
04	Breath as a doorway	11	Conscious preparedness
05	Food and living resilience	12	A rhythm for ordinary days
06	Sleep is preparation	13	Hope in action
07	Water is relationship

CHAPTER ONE · COME HOME

Begin with yourself

Before solving the future, meet the person who is here now.

Uncertainty can pull attention into imagined tomorrows. The body tightens, the mind races, and everything begins to feel equally urgent. A pause is not denial. It is how we recover enough choice to respond wisely.

Start with what is directly true: the support beneath you, the temperature of the air, the sound furthest away, the next breath leaving your body. Let your horizon become this hour. Ask what would make the next hour kinder and more workable.

A gentle understanding

Resilience is not armour. It is the capacity to bend, receive support, recover and return to relationship.

One living action

Put both feet on the ground. Exhale slowly three times. Name one thing that needs care today and one thing that can wait.

Reflect: What helps you feel most like yourself again?

CHAPTER TWO · REMEMBER THE WEB

Regenerative interbeing

Your wellbeing has never been yours alone.

We are shaped by soil, water, food, sunlight, breath, culture, place and relationship. When we care for ourselves, we become more capable of caring for others. When we protect land and water, the living world nourishes us in return.

Regenerative interbeing replaces the lonely question “How do I survive?” with the more fertile question “How can we help life flourish together?” The answer might be a garden, a shared meal, a repaired friendship, a protected spring or the courage to ask for help.

From Benjy

Water led to soil; soil led to food; food led to community; community led back to the heart. Everything kept showing me relationship.

One living action

Choose one ordinary thing - a glass of water, a meal or a shirt - and trace five relationships that brought it to you.

Reflect: Where are you already held by life?

CHAPTER THREE · FIND THE GROUND

Begin with your nervous system

A steadier body gives wise action somewhere to begin.

Stress responses are not personal failures. They are protective patterns. When activation stays high, the mind may scan for danger, sleep may become difficult and small decisions may feel enormous.

Orient slowly to the room. Feel where the chair, ground or wall holds your weight. Unclench your jaw, lower your shoulders and lengthen one exhale. If it feels supportive, hear a trusted voice or sit near someone calm.

Please be gentle

These practices are educational and cannot replace trauma-informed or medical care. If grounding increases distress, stop and choose a familiar support.

One living action

Try the 5-4-3-2-1 practice: notice five things you see, four you feel, three you hear, two you smell and one you appreciate.

Reflect: Which simple signal tells your body, “I am here now”?

CHAPTER FOUR • MAKE ROOM

Breath as a doorway

You do not need a heroic breathing practice. Begin with a comfortable breath.

Let the inhale arrive without pulling. Allow the exhale to become slightly slower. If counting feels pleasant, try inhaling for four and exhaling for five or six. Continue for one to three minutes and remain within ease.

Stop if you feel dizzy, numb, panicked or unwell. Avoid intense breath holds or rapid breathing when pregnant, driving, in water, at height, or with relevant health concerns. Seek qualified individual guidance.

From Sofia

Sometimes the sacred practice is not to transcend what we feel, but to breathe beside it with tenderness until we remember we are not alone.

One living action

Place a hand on your heart or belly. Take six easy breaths with an exhale just a little longer than the inhale.

Reflect: What changes when breath becomes companionship rather than performance?

CHAPTER FIVE • NOURISH THE ROOTS

Food and living resilience

Food security begins before a crisis and closer than a warehouse.

Start with regular meals you digest well, varied whole foods, enough protein and fibre for your needs, and a small buffer of staples you already know how to cook. Then grow relationship: know a farmer, join a seed exchange, preserve a seasonal surplus or plant one perennial.

Gardens become more resilient when soil stays covered, roots remain living, water is welcomed into the ground and diversity replaces rows of vulnerability. The right plant list begins with your place.

Supplements are not the foundation

Needs vary. More is not always better, and supplements can interact with medicines or health conditions. Use evidence-based guidance and qualified care.

One living action

Choose one staple you already eat. Add enough for a few extra meals, label the date and begin a calm, rotating pantry rather than an emergency hoard.

Reflect: Which food skill would make your household more capable and connected?

CHAPTER SIX • LET NIGHT RESTORE YOU

Sleep is preparation

Rest is not time stolen from the work. It is part of the work.

Support sleep with regularity before perfection: a broadly consistent waking time, daylight in the morning, movement during the day, a darker and cooler sleeping space, and a gentle transition away from stimulating media.

If sleep problems persist, become severe or arrive with breathing pauses, major mood changes or dangerous fatigue, seek professional support.

One living action

Choose a “lights softer” time tonight. Dim one room, put the phone out of reach and do one quiet thing for ten minutes.

Reflect: What would make your evenings feel more like a landing than a collapse?

CHAPTER SEVEN · FOLLOW THE FLOW

Water is life and relationship

Resilience grows when we know where our water comes from, how it moves and what happens when the usual system pauses.

Keep a sensible amount of safe drinking water suited to your household, climate and local guidance. Know how to shut off the mains, where leaks are likely and which treatment methods suit your actual source.

On land, read contours, soils, catchments, overflow paths, fire risk and legal requirements before moving earth. Thoughtfully placed earthworks, plants, mulch and protected soil can slow, spread and sink rain - but poor placement can cause damage. Seek site-specific design where stakes are high.

One living action

Trace your household water from source to tap to drain. Write down one backup and one place where water could be conserved.

Reflect: How would your choices change if water were treated as a guest rather than a product?

CHAPTER EIGHT • LET ENERGY MOVE

Movement for aliveness

The body does not need punishment. It needs circulation, strength, mobility, play and enough challenge to remember what it can do.

Walking, carrying, gardening, dancing, stretching, swimming, climbing stairs and practising balance are all valid. Begin from your actual capacity. Small, frequent movement often belongs more easily to life than an ideal routine that never happens.

One living action

Move for five minutes in a way that feels friendly: walk, shake, stretch, dance or tend one small garden task.

Reflect: Which movement leaves you feeling more alive?

CHAPTER NINE • RETURN TO THE OLDER RHYTHM

Nature and rest

There are rhythms older than urgency.

Sit beneath a tree. Watch birds. Touch soil. Listen to rain without turning it into information. Nature connection can begin with sky through a window, a street tree, a balcony herb or the honest life of compost.

Rest belongs here too. Forests have seasons; fields lie fallow; bodies require recovery. Put the screen down sometimes. Let attention widen beyond the small bright rectangle.

Sacred and silly

Lie on the ground. Name the clouds badly. Make tea for a tree. Serious times still need laughter - especially serious times.

One living action

Spend ten screen-free minutes with one living being or natural element. Do not improve it. Simply notice.

Reflect: Where does your attention soften without asking permission?

CHAPTER TEN • WE ARE NOT ALONE

Community is resilience

The most important infrastructure may be relationship.

Know a neighbour. Share a meal. Exchange seeds. Learn who has tools, transport, medical knowledge, growing experience or the gift of staying calm. Offer what you can without trying to become indispensable.

Healthy community includes consent, boundaries, repair, listening and room for difference. Begin with small circles of trust and practical care.

From Benjy & Sofia

Transformation becomes real when people feel seen enough to participate. We need skills, yes - and we need belonging.

One living action

Send one message: "I am strengthening our local circle. Is there a skill, seed, tool or cup of tea you would like to share?"

Reflect: What can you offer easily, and what support is difficult to receive?

CHAPTER ELEVEN · LOVE MADE PRACTICAL

Conscious preparedness

Preparedness is not a performance of fear. It is care that has remembered tomorrow.

Begin with the disruptions most realistic for your place: heat, cold, fire, storm, power loss, water interruption, illness, transport delays or temporary isolation. Follow local guidance and adapt for children, elders, animals, disabilities and medicines.

Gather home basics you already understand: water, familiar food, first-aid supplies, lighting, safe power, warmth or cooling, hygiene supplies, essential medicines and copies of key information. Learn evacuation routes, local hazards, emergency contacts and who may need help.

For EMF concerns, begin with low-cost choices: distance, fewer unnecessary wireless devices, wired connections when convenient and not sleeping with a phone beside your head. Avoid alarming claims and products promising guaranteed protection; specialist measurement is wiser than guesswork.

One living action

Choose one likely local disruption. Write a one-page plan with people, supplies, communication and a calm first step.

Reflect: Which preparation would give your household the most genuine ease?

CHAPTER TWELVE · MAKE IT LIVEABLE

A rhythm for ordinary days

A resilient life is built mostly when nothing dramatic is happening.

Create a rhythm simple enough to return to after disruption. This is not another schedule to perfect. It is a handful of anchors that remind body, home and community how to come back.

Morning: light, water, one conscious breath and a clear next action. Midday: real food, a little movement and contact with the living world. Evening: soften light, reduce input, notice what is complete and prepare one thing for tomorrow. Weekly: tend supplies, soil, relationships, finances, rest and one useful skill.

One living action

Choose one morning anchor and one evening anchor. Practise them for seven days with more kindness than ambition.

Reflect: Which tiny rhythm keeps the lantern lit?

CHAPTER THIRTEEN • KEEP BECOMING

Hope in action

Hope becomes trustworthy when it participates.

Hope is not certainty that everything will unfold as we wish. It is the decision to keep feeding life without needing a guarantee: a covered patch of soil, a repaired roof, a shared meal, a boundary spoken with love, a tired person choosing rest.

We are the architects of the future, and we are the ones we have been waiting for - not as isolated heroes, but as one circle of life, learning to lead and listen together. New Earth is embodied imperfectly through practical care, joyful creation, faith, discernment and rest when rest is needed.

You are allowed to begin small

One kind and capable action is not too little. It is how a life changes direction.

One living action

Complete this sentence: "In the next seven days, I will help life flourish by..." Choose something visible, possible and shared if you can.

Reflect: What is yours to do - and what becomes possible when you do it with others?

A NOTE FROM US

We are learning beside you.

These pages grew from years of gardens, retreats, circles, teachers, tears, laughter, mistakes, deep remembering and practical work across continents. They do not contain every answer. They carry some of the questions and practices that helped us return to life.

May you use them with discernment. May your version be beautifully your own. May what steadies you become care for the people, places and beings around you.

With so much love, Benjy & Sofia ♡

Health and safety notes

This companion offers general education, not personalised medical, mental-health, nutrition, emergency or land-engineering advice. Bodies, climates and risks differ. Use qualified care and local guidance whenever the stakes are significant.

Trusted starting places: NIH Office of Dietary Supplements; CDC sleep information; World Health Organization guidance on physical activity and electromagnetic fields; and your local public-health, emergency, water, fire and land-use authorities.

Keep the lantern travelling

This guide is free so it can reach whoever needs a softer doorway into resilience. Share it, join the circle, or gift back so more living resources can grow.

awakening-eden-library.netlify.app · paypal.me/BSauber ·
t.me/awakening_Eden